

Dining Facilitator Guide

Facilitator:	Team Lead
Topic:	The Courses Course: Facilitator Led Portion
Objectives:	The purpose of this training is to reinforce the process for serving food in courses learned in the eLearning module. This process will improve the resident experience related to wait times and proper food temperatures.
Review:	Review the Merrill Gardens process for serving food in courses with the new team member. Point out any items not covered in the eLearning that the server will need to know about your community's dining best practices.
Show:	Show the new team member how it's done. Have the new team member shadow you as you serve a meal in courses. Take time to describe what you're doing and relate the steps back to the eLearning. Review your community's process for bussing tables correctly and resetting for the next guest.
Observe and Coach:	When you are confident that the new team member understands the process, observe as they serve meals in courses.

The Courses Course

	Positive feedback goes a long way. Try to catch the new hire doing something right, then give them a pat on the back. When you notice the new team member getting off track, share feedback with them to get them pointed in the right direction.
Notes:	A few notes on coaching and feedback. A quick conversation is often all it takes. Remember, most people prefer to be given corrections in a one-on-one type situation. We aren't trying to embarrass or shame anyone. Check out the example of a feedback conversation below: Try stating what you observed. "I noticed that you fired the ticket before serving the soup/ salad course. Then describing what happens when.... "When that happens, the guests don't have time to eat their salad before their entrée gets cold." And then offering a more effective option. "Try serving soup and salad and then firing the ticket. Then guests will be ready to eat their entrée while it's still hot."
